PREFACE

THE project of compiling a School Register for the Edinburgh Academy has been under consideration for a number of years, and it is a serious misfortune that the work was not undertaken a quarter of a century ago, when yet a few of the original pupils were with us, and while access could still be had to that unique repository of Academical lore, the memory of the late Mr. James Carmichael. During that period much valuable information regarding those who attended the School in its early years has been obscured, if not irretrievably lost, and the task of collecting such material as was still available has been rendered more difficult. In many directions much anxious work has been done in making investigations which have proved fruitless through lapse of time, but it is expected that the circulation of this volume among so many interested readers may result in opening up sources of information which have not hitherto been reached.

On various occasions during the last ten years members of the Committee of the Academical Club have, along with others interested in the School, urged the importance of undertaking the publication of a School Register, but it was not until 1908 that any definite step towards the achievement of that object was taken. The Academical Club then appointed Mr. A. S. Pringle, advocate, to be Editor, with a Consultative Committee to co-operate with him consisting of Mr. J. H. Millar, advocate, Dr. John S. Mackay, Mr. A. A. Scot Skirving, C.M.G., Mr. F. C. Thomson, advocate, Mr. S. C. Freeman, and Mr. C. E. W. Macpherson, C.A., as Secretary. Mr. Pringle did much valuable work in collecting and arranging most of the information that could be procured from the School records and in making out the Schedules and relative Card Index on which the Register has been built up. Mr. Pringle was also subsequently engaged in dealing with these Schedules, but after completing a few hundred records he found that other calls upon his time and energies had become so pressing that he had to relinquish his duties as Editor.

The Committee of the Club, on Mr. Pringle's retirement in May 1910, appointed Mr. Thomas Henderson, W.S., and Mr. P. F. Hamilton-Grierson, advocate, to be Joint Editors, and they since that date have carried on the work of collecting all the information obtainable concerning those who attended the School.

While the Editors have in some quarters encountered a disappointing spirit of apathy (nearly a thousand Schedules are still outstanding), they have as a general rule received the hearty and sympathetic assistance not only of Academicals, but also of many who had no direct connexion with the School.

The members of the Consultative Committee have rendered valuable services. The historical Introduction is from the pen of Mr. J. H. Millar, as are also the School Bibliography and the Biographical Notes on the Rectors. Mr. F. C. Thomson has furnished lists of the Directors and other Office-bearers. The Athletic Records have been compiled with much labour and under serious difficulties by Mr. S. C. Freeman. Mr. Scot Skirving has supplied the references to the Academy Chronicle which are appended to the records of those concerning whom any article of consequence has appeared in that magazine, and the late Dr. Mackay furnished, after careful research, particulars of the publications written either for use in the School or for other purposes by Academy Rectors and Masters. His lamented death occurred as this volume was passing through the press.

A few words of explanation are necessary regarding the scheme of the Register. From the commencement of the School till 1886 the 'Class-Master' system prevailed, but was then discarded in favour of the present system. Under the original plan all the boys who joined the First or lowest class—the geits—were placed under the care of a particular Classical Master, who undertook the sole charge of their education in Classics until they reached the Fourth Class, after which they came under the direct tuition of the Rector in Classics in the Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Classes, the Class Master sharing indeed with the Rector the duty of their instruction, but also returning to start another set of geits upon their scholastic course. Thus the same group of boys moved upwards from class to class in consecutive sessions from the bottom to the top of the School, with the result that they formed closer bonds of union with each other and with their Class Master than is possible under the modern arrangements. Almost invariably, too, as each Seventh-Class group left the School, the members, with former class associates, formed themselves into a Class Club named after the Class Master and distinguished by the years of entering and leaving the School. These Class Clubs have done good work, not merely in cementing friendships formed in the class-room or the yards, but also in preserving the traditions of the Academy and fostering its prosperity.

Having regard to the significance of the Class-Master system, it was decided to make it the basis of the arrangement of entries in the Register for the years during which it prevailed, and for subsequent years to adopt the usual method of entering each boy under the year in which he began his school life. It should, however, be added that, during the existence of the old system, there were now and then cases of boys changing from one Class Master to another by remaining for a second year in the same class, or by 'skipping' a class and going to a higher one than would in the ordinary course have been taken. The Editors have found it necessary to adhere to a uniform rule in dealing with such exceptional cases, and all boys have been entered in the Master's Class in which they joined the School. It has not generally been practicable to indicate the movements of such boys from one Master's Class to that of another, but where attention has been drawn to the fact a note has been added indicating the change.

Although a Register of this kind can never be altogether complete, it is hoped that the work which has been done will lay a solid foundation for later editions. This First Edition, for the reasons already stated, doubtless lacks many items of information which are still procurable, and it is earnestly asked that all those into whose hands it may come will communicate any particulars within their knowledge which are awanting to the Secretary of the Academical Club, Edinburgh.

In conclusion, the Editors have to tender their best thanks to the many Academicals and others who have generously given their time and trouble in assisting and forwarding the work. They desire in particular to acknowledge their heavy debt of obligation to Mr. A. M. Kennedy, the Sub-Editor, who has spared no pains and has bestowed much laborious work upon the preparation of the book, without which it would not have made so creditable an appearance. Special thanks are also due to Mr. Walter Seton Dickson, advocate, whose acquaintance with Scottish county families has been of great value, and who has made careful search for particulars in cases where the ordinary sources of information were defective.

INTRODUCTION

'Leonard Horner and I had often discussed the causes and the remedies of the decline of classical education in Scotland; and we were at last satisfied that no adequate improvement could be effected so long as there was only one great classical school in Edinburgh, and this one placed under the town council, and lowered, perhaps necessarily, so as to suit the wants of a class of boys to more than two-thirds of whom classical accomplishment is foreseen to be useless. So one day on the top of one of the Pentlands—emblematic of the solidity of our foundation and of the extent of our prospects—we two resolved to set about the establishment of a new school. On taking others into council we found that the conviction of the inadequacy of the High School was far more general than we supposed. Scott took it up eagerly. The sum of £10,000 was subscribed immediately; and soon afterwards about £2000 more. We were fiercely opposed, as we expected, by the town council; and, but not fiercely, by a few of the friends of the institution we were going to encroach upon. But, after due discussion and plotting, our contributors finally resolved to proceed, and in 1823 the building was begun. It was opened, under the title of "The Edinburgh Academy," on the 1st of October 1824, amidst a great assemblage of proprietors, pupils, and the public. We had a good prayer by Sir Harry Moncreiff, and speeches by Scott and old Henry Mackenzie, and an important day for education in Scotland, in reference to the middle and upper classes. Mackenzie's vigour was delightful. Though about eighty he made an animated address, exulting in the rise of a new school upon a reformed system.'[1]

SUCH is a concise and authentic account—the locus classicus on the subject—of the genesis of THE EDINBURGH ACADEMY, and it need be supplemented here in only a few particulars. The word 'Academy,' it may be premised, was originally applied in Scotland to a class of institution called into being in the latter half of the eighteenth century by the growing demand for a more 'practical' kind of education than the old burgh grammar schools supplied. By the end of the century the academies and the grammar schools had in most places coalesced, so that the name of Academy had come to signify a school in which the endowed and proprietary characters were combined. Typical examples were the Perth Academy, founded in 1760, and united with the grammar school in 1807, and the Ayr Academy, founded in 1794.

It will, however, have been observed that the motives which inspired the founders of the new Academy in Edinburgh were far from being purely utilitarian. The interests of classical learning in Scotland were what they had at heart, the promotion of classical learning was the object at which they aimed. But, apart from other drawbacks which they hoped to get rid of, the situation of the High School, erected in 1778 not far from the site of the present University, had become highly inconvenient for boys residing in the New Town which had grown up since that date. The best part of a year was spent in futile negotiations with the Town Council, who were apparently willing enough at one time to entertain a proposal to move the High School to a more central situation. The promoters, on the other hand, would hear of nothing but two High Schools, one for the New Town and one for the Old. They accordingly proceeded with their own scheme, and thus the Academy has from the first been wholly proprietary in its constitution. The total sum subscribed by the proprietors, who were incorporated by Royal Charter in 1825, amounts to some £16,000. Upon this no dividend has ever been paid, nor has one penny of public money been asked for or received either out of local rates or out of Government grants. The Academy may thus be truly described as the unadulterated product of individual enterprise.

The West Princes Street Gardens (the basin of the old North Loch) and the Excise Office (now the Royal Bank) were among the situations thought of for the new school. In the end it was built 'in a field to the north of the New Town, and within ten minutes' walk from the most distant part of it.' The architect was Mr. William Burn, who seems to have had very proper notions as to the desirability of abundant cubic space and plenty of daylight for class-rooms. The area on which the simple but dignified building with all its parts and pertinents stands extends to four acres. Would that double that amount of territory had been acquired! A proposal was mooted, but fell through, for buying the greater part of the east side of Saxe-Coburg Place for boarding-houses. Some of the masters have always received boarders in their homes, but many generations of pupils were to pass through the school before boarding-houses built for that purpose were provided. The school buildings and yards must have been a conspicuous feature in the magnificent panorama which unrolls itself to the northward from George Street, until they were effectually obliterated from the landscape by the erection of St. Stephen's Church in 1828.

The opening ceremony was a great event. 'It was pleasant,' notes the Scotsman of 2nd October 1824, 'to see the boys ranging themselves in their order, all neat and clean, with looks full of vivacity, thinking only of the animated scene they were bearing a part in, and concerning themselves little about the tasks of the morrow.' According to the Courant of the same date, Sir Harry Moncreiff's prayer was 'most impressive and eloquent.' The main passages in Sir Walter Scott's inspiring address are duly reproduced in Mr. Lockhart's Life of his father-in-law,[1] which does not, however, record that his allusion to the Greek War of Independence then waging was received with 'peals of applause.' The Rector struck the right note by emphasising the importance of Latin and Greek. 'They were not to make any innovation, but surely the country of Crichton and Buchanan should be eminent in Latin literature.' Greek would be taught through the medium of English, and not of a Latin jargon. The principles of the English language would also be taught. Altogether, 'he trusted they were so complete that they might be said to be a self-contained house.' As for the good old 'Man of Feeling,' he may have been (teste Cockburn) 'animated,' but, if the Courant is to be believed, he was inaudible.

The new venture found the local press upon the whole not unfriendly. The Scotsman had been apprehensive lest the Academy should be 'too patrician,' but praised the Directors' preliminary statement. It pointed out how men of all shades of opinion (and political feeling ran high within two years of Sir Alexander Boswell's lamentable death) had joined hands in the undertaking, and characteristically taunted the clergy with not having come forward to connect themselves with the new institution. In the controversy which continued to rage as to whether the High School should be transferred from the Old Town to the New, the Scotsman supported the negative. The transference was, nevertheless, effected in 1829. It is pleasant to remember that, at the dinner given by the Directors to celebrate the opening of the Academy, Sir Walter Scott had proposed the toast of 'Prosperity to the High School of Edinburgh.'

It was upon the system of the High School that the Academy was in its main features admittedly modelled, and the system of the High School differed in no material respect from that which prevailed in the other burgh schools of Scotland. Its chief notes were the unrestricted competition of the masters with one another, and the absence of an appointed and obligatory curriculum. This state of matters continued down to the third quarter of the nineteenth century, if not later. We find the Assistant Commissioners—Messrs. Harvey and Sellar—reporting as follows in 1868 :—

> 'In many, probably the majority, of the schools visited we found that there was no settled curriculum or course. Each school was a congeries of classes under different masters, without any definite aim to which all were striving, and without any harmony of action among the teachers. . . . In these schools there was a perpetual struggle for fees among all these masters. . . . The education is sold in these schools like wares in a shop, at so much per pound, and the idea of the seller is to sell as many pounds as he can for his own immediate benefit. There is a nominal partnership existing, inasmuch as all the teachers are appointed by the same managing board and teach in the same building. But all the partners are struggling against each other, thinking only of themselves and caring for the good neither of the firm nor of the trade.'

[1] Edin. ed., vii. 245.

Thus every master had a direct vested interest in the size of his class and collected his own fees—a practice, by the by, not unknown in some English schools, e.g. Merchant Taylors'.[1] It followed that the position of the Headmaster or Rector was anomalous, and it is not surprising to learn that such an authority was occasionally dispensed with altogether. At the best he was but primus inter pares. At the worst he was but a medium of communication between the members of the staff, as they would now be termed, and the managing body. 'He had little to do with the appointment of existing teachers, did not regulate the work of the school, and held only limited disciplinary powers.' The average Scots burgh school consisted in reality of so many separate institutions collected under the same roof.[2]

The founders of the Academy adopted the traditional plan, with certain important modifications. There were to be five classes, the first four being each assigned to a classical master, and the fifth being the Rector's peculiar care. The first class—universally known as the 'geits'—was conducted by its master through four successive years, until at the beginning of its fifth session it was handed over to the Rector. The master then took in hand a fresh first class, though he rendered a certain amount of assistance to the Rector in teaching his former set of pupils. The Rector's class was to remain with him for two years. Before long it naturally split up into a fifth and a sixth class, and in 1827 a seventh class was instituted, when a French master was also for the first time appointed. A maximum number of 110 was laid down for each of the first four classes, and the Rector's class was restricted to the modest figure of 160. The various masters and the Rector collected in person the fees respectively due to them, but from 1829 onwards the whole fees payable by the boys were collected by the Clerk to the Directors, and divided among the masters according to a specified scale. At the very beginning the Directors laid it down as an absolute rule that no master should under any pretence take fees of a higher amount than that authorised, 'and that there shall be no Candlemas gift or any other gratuity whatever to the masters.'

The school hours were from nine o'clock till three on five days of the week, and from nine till eleven on Saturday. The much appreciated boon of a whole holiday on that day was not conceded until 1850. The session opened on 1st October, and terminated with the Annual Public Examination or Exhibition on 1st August. There was a recess from Christmas Day to New Year's Day, both inclusive, and the King's Birthday was a holiday. Four days—from a Thursday to a Monday inclusive—were allowed in October or November, and four in April or May, for 'the Preachings.' Four other holidays might be given in the course of the year at the discretion of the Rector. Promotion from a lower to a higher class was in the vast majority of cases automatic: the first class of one session became the second of the next en bloc, and so on up the school. It is a remarkable but by no means an unparalleled fact that this system worked a good deal better in practice than it had any business in theory to do.

[2] A History of Secondary Education in Scotland, by John Strong, 1912, p. 182.

Two points stand out prominently in the 'Academy plan': the unequivocal supremacy of the Rector, and the ascertainment of a uniform curriculum.

With regard to the former, the emphatic declaration of the Directors seems worth quoting. 'We deem it,' so they affirm, 'to be quite indispensable for the good government of the school, and for an efficient operation of the plan of tuition, that all the Under Masters shall consider themselves as subject to the superintendence of the Rector: that it shall be his duty to see that the system of instruction authorised by the Directors is carried properly into effect in all its parts; that if he finds any of the masters defective in any respect, he shall recommend the necessary alterations in their proceedings according to the way which his own judgment shall point out; but, if he finds his admonitions neglected, that it shall be imperative upon him to inform the Directors,' with whom alone rested the power of appointment and dismissal. In process of time the Rector's powers have steadily increased, and the Board have for a good many years past committed to him the duty of engaging and dismissing the staff.

With regard to the latter point, attendance upon the writing and arithmetic master was, to begin with, declared to be optional. But the exercise of this option even in a small number of cases was found to be attended with so much inconvenience and disadvantage that, after a year's experience, the Directors announced their resolution 'to make it imperative on the boys to attend all the classes prescribed in the course of instruction. Wherever,' they proceed, 'a boy is either very much before or very much behind his class-fellows, the masters will take care that he shall be properly employed according to his degree of advancement; but it is much better for the discipline of the school that all the boys in the same class should be occupied and remain within the bounds of the Academy during the whole hours of teaching than that they should either be allowed to run about in idleness, or go beyond the walls to attend other classes, which affords an idle boy too good an opportunity to stay away from school altogether.'[1] The closing of the school gates during school hours (I understand that they are not now actually locked) has thus been a distinctive note of the Academy from its very infancy, though boys who live near enough to return home for dinner in the middle of the day are allowed to do so. But for this general rule the King's peace in the village of Stockbridge would have run the risk of daily breach. As it was, 'cad-fights' with the 'keelies' of the neighbourhood used to be sufficiently frequent, and, in time of snow, sufficiently dangerous, to please the most pugnacious. Fortunately, they are all but unknown to the Academy boys of to-day, and the war-cry of 'Hulla! hulla! hulla!' (with the accent on the first syllable) is no longer heard in the land.

[1] Directors' Report to the Proprietors, 1827.

Of the curriculum itself not much need be said. Latin and Greek, as we have seen, played the principal part, and members of the staff were not dilatory in compiling and publishing appropriate text-books. The Latin Rudiments (based on Ruddiman) and Delectus and the Greek Rudiments and Extracts are, in the present writer's humble opinion, incomparably the best works of their kind ever produced, in this country at all events; infinitely superior as teaching instruments to new-fangled compilations designed to make grammar easy and agreeable. The correct pronunciation of the Latin tongue gave cause for much heart-searching in the early years, even the Proprietors stepping in to take part in the fray. A compromise was ultimately reached, as a result of which the boys in the first three classes were taught to pronounce in the Scots manner, and the boys in the higher classes in the English. Such an arrangement was almost bound to break down; and, in point of fact, the English mode of pronunciation predominated down to Dr. Harvey's day, when in 1872 the other was revived throughout the school. The most novel feature in the orthodox course of instruction was the importance attached to the teaching of English, both for its own sake and for that of the study of the classics. The Directors undertook to provide a master for English 'who shall have a pure English accent,' though he need not be an Englishman by birth, and who shall be 'a well-educated, accomplished scholar.' It only remains to note that the frequent infliction of corporal punishment was to be 'discouraged,' though in point of fact the tawse has never fallen into desuetude.

The Rector and Masters were elected on Saturday, 3rd April 1824, six months before the opening of the first session. Their names were as follows:—

RECTOR.—The Rev. John Williams of Balliol College, Oxford, Vicar of Lampeter, and Headmaster of Lampeter School.

CLASSICAL MASTERS.—Robert Mitchell, A.M., Rector of the Grammar School, Kirkcudbright; William Henry Marriott, B.A., Trinity College, Cambridge; Archibald Carmichael, Teacher of Latin and Greek in the Academy, Inverness; and George Ferguson, Assistant Master in the Grammar School, Selkirk.

ENGLISH MASTER.—Charles Barker, B.A., Trinity College, Cambridge.

WRITING MASTER.—James Glover, Writer in the Academy, Hope Street, Liverpool.

MATHEMATICAL AND ARITHMETICAL MASTER.—James Gloag, Teacher of Mathematics in Heriot's Hospital, Edinburgh.

The JANITOR was the celebrated John Howell (d. 1863), who wrote an Essay on the War Galleys of the Ancients and a Life of Alexander Selkirk, and from whom the Directors were presently to purchase 'some very ingenious models of an ancient galley, a Roman Camp, Cæsar's bridge over the Rhine, and of some machines described in the classics.' The remains of the galley were certainly extant down to a comparatively recent date in the cellars of the main building.

There can be no doubt that in the person of JOHN WILLIAMS ('Taffey' or 'Punch,' as he was familiarly denominated) the Directors secured a remarkable man. He had been a contemporary and a close friend at Balliol of Mr. Lockhart, to whose good offices, as well as to those of Sir Walter Scott, he doubtless owed his appointment. On the eve of his election the Directors heard disquieting reports. Williams not only had all the irascibility of a Welshman, but was said to be 'morose and cynical'; his temper was 'unequal'; his manners were sadly to seek; as assistant to Dr. Gabell at Winchester he had been more conspicuous for the fortiter in re than for the suaviter in modo; and so on. A deputation of the Board hastened to Oxford, where the evidence was conflicting. A long and beautifully written letter from Lockhart probably did more to allay their misgivings than anything else, and the present writer is bound to say that he never read a more handsome, a more judicious, or (to judge by the event) a more truthful testimonial. Under Williams the Academy flourished beyond expectation. At the end of its fourth session the number of boys attending the school had reached the astonishing figure of 521. Before long the Academical Club for old boys was formed, and talked of 'hiring apartments.' It was to fulfil a much more useful purpose in establishing prizes for the school, and in founding an exhibition to the Universities in 1868. After manifesting all the symptoms of senile decay, it rose like a phœnix from its ashes in 1900, and became the powerful organisation which we know to-day.

In 1828 Williams resigned the Rectorship to take up the Chair of Roman Language and Literature in the new-born University of London. His place was filled by the 'transient and embarrassed phantom' of the Rev. Thomas Sheepshanks, who remained for only one session. In 1829 Williams, who had never even lectured in London, returned to Edinburgh and resumed his former office, to the mutual satisfaction of himself and the Directors. This singular escapade supplied Sir Walter Scott with strong confirmation of his cherished opinion with regard to schoolmasters, which the curious will find set forth in Mr. Lang's Life of Lockhart,[1] and much more bluntly expressed in that invaluable storehouse of Academical tradition, Colonel Fergusson's Chronicles of the Cumming Club.[2] The Archdeacon, as he became in 1833, remained at the Academy until 1847, consolidating the great work he had begun. In that year he returned to his native principality, and presently became the first Warden of Llandovery School. Sir Walter, whose younger son had been one of his private pupils at Lampeter, described him as 'a heaven-born teacher' and as 'the best schoolmaster in Europe.' And this testimony is corroborated by Archibald Campbell Tait—the greatest of his pupils, the greatest perhaps of all old Academy boys—who paid a fine tribute to him in 1857, and again at the Jubilee Dinner in 1874. 'He was a man and a real man; he taught as none but a man of great intellectual power could teach; and he fascinated his pupils as none but a man of feeling could those with whom he has to do.'[1] It may be doubted if full justice has ever been done to his share in reviving the moribund and all but derelict frame of secondary education in Scotland. Yet it should not be forgotten that what he did was done, not merely with the passive acquiescence of the Directors, but rather, with their lively counsel and energetic aid. A glance at the names of the original Board—being the fifteen which come first in the list printed in this volume—conclusively shows that a more distinguished and representative body of citizens could scarcely have been gathered together in the Edinburgh of 1824. Besides being distinguished and representative, they were, moreover, essentially busy men; and they were thus able, as their minutes prove, to bestow an amount of trouble and attention upon the institution under their control which would astonish the present generation. For it is busy men alone who can find time to do the things worth doing.

[1] Vol. ii. p. 31.

[2] P. 69.

Having thus seen the Academy fairly launched upon its career of usefulness and prosperity, we must proceed with our narrative at a somewhat more rapid pace. Archdeacon Williams's successor was the Rev. JOHN HANNAH, Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, who held the Rectorship for seven uneventful years. The most important incident in his term of office was the acquisition upon lease in 1854 of the field at Raeburn Place. The Directors had never been insensible to the importance of exercise and athletics. In their preliminary statement they proposed that the geits should have three-quarters of an hour for play in the morning, and another quarter of an hour before going into school at two o'clock, and they further expressed the opinion that ' between every change of occupation there ought to be an interval in all the classes; a run of five or ten minutes in the playground will be quite enough to renovate the relaxed energies both of body and mind, and make the boys come with fresh vigour to their new employment, and will materially conduce to their health.' It was in these intervals that the game of 'hailes,' unquestionably the best variety of the hockey or shinty type of game ever invented, came into vogue, superseding marbles and other more infantile amusements. A drill sergeant was engaged as far back as 1826 for the benefit of such boys as chose to take advantage of his services, and the well-known name of Mr. Roland occurs in the prospectus of 1831, if not earlier, as giving instruction in fencing and gymnastic exercises. Elderly and middle-aged men will recall the old gymnasium ' down the bank,' nor will they have forgotten that it was on the level piece of ground outside ' Roland's ' that the fights took place. Cricket of a sort was played in the yards in the 'forties. But the provision of a cricket field was an enormous step in advance, which it would have been impossible to take but for the public-spirited efforts of individual members of the Academical Club, and more particularly of

[1] Prize List for 1875, p. 94.

Dr. Hannah, Mr. Kenneth Mackenzie, Mr. Thomas Cleghorn (a son-in-law of Lord Cockburn), and last, but not least, Mr. Robert Balfour, who jointly assumed the pecuniary responsibility for the transaction. The field would long ago have been handed over to the speculative builder had not a movement been set on foot to acquire it in perpetuity. The necessary funds were raised by private subscription, and the Academy cricket ground, together with the Grange Cricket Club field and the adjoining pond of the Coates Curling Club, has since 1882 been vested in a body of trustees, who hold it for behoof of the Academical Cricket Club and the school. The Academical Football Club was founded as a branch of the Cricket Club in 1858, and by that time, no doubt, the 'winter pastime' was in full swing in the Academy during the appropriate season. The tale of the achievements of the school and the club, both in football and in cricket, compiled with meticulous industry from the most elusive sources, is duly set forth in another part of this volume. The school colours are blue and white—the colours of the young Gargantua, the white signifying gladness, pleasure, delight, and rejoicing, and the blue, celestial things.

In 1854 Dr. Hannah accepted the Wardenship of Trinity College, Glenalmond. He was succeeded at the Academy by the Rev. James Stephen Hodson of Balliol and Merton Colleges, Oxford, a brother of 'Hodson of Hodson's Horse,' and assuredly not the least striking figure in the roll of Academy Rectors. During his time the school may be said to have held a unique position and enjoyed a unique prestige among the educational establishments of Scotland. This was partly due to good fortune as well as to good guidance. Competition was not severe. Glenalmond was really the only formidable rival. Merchiston Castle School and Loretto School were just emerging to dry land from a trying series of vicissitudes towards the close of Dr. Hodson's reign, the one under Mr. Rogerson, the other under Mr. Almond. The Academy thus enjoyed a practical monopoly of the best material—the pick of the boys emanating from the upper and professional classes ; for the number of those who were sent for their education to England was at that time trifling. Yet it would be unjust to deny to Dr. Hodson his full proportion of the credit due for the uninterrupted successes achieved by his old pupils at the Universities and in other walks of life. A fine scholar and a strict disciplinarian, he ruled the place not with a rod of iron nor a pair of tawse but with a tongue steeped in vitriol, and he left upon all who passed through his hands the indelible impression of a strong personality. Now the gift of sarcasm, though an admirable servant, is a notoriously bad master. Dr. Hodson made many enemies, nor heeded how many he made. The stories illustrating his propensity to an 'hybristic' manner and speech are innumerable, and it need hardly be said that this failing, luxuriantly indulged, became inveterate with the lapse of years. He did not reserve his memorable gibes for those boys whom he disliked, or for their parents, whom he probably disliked still more ; the long-suffering Directors themselves fell under the dreaded lash. He had a positive genius for calculated indiscretion, and for several years before his abdication his relations with the Board had been a good deal less than pleasant. Finally, after a controversy which strained them to breaking point, Dr. Hodson resigned at the end of the session of 1869.

One has heard so much of 'Goudie,' as he was nicknamed, and come across so many men who had been under him—they grow fewer, alas, every year—that it is no easy task to 'reckon him up,' in Mr. Bucket's convenient phrase. But it cannot be seriously doubted that he was a great headmaster, and our last word in parting from him must be one of applause rather than of censure. Not much importance, perhaps, is to be attached to his institution in 1855 of a 'Modern Side,' which blossomed into a 'Modern School' in 1866. As in most other schools in this island, that department was for many years a mere receptacle for boys without much natural aptitude for study of any kind, though doubtless it served a purpose by relieving the ordinary classes of their presence. But the highest testimony to Dr. Hodson's clearness of vision and soundness of judgment (apart from the many distinguished men whom he helped to 'turn out') is afforded by the fact that he foresaw the termination of the 'halcyon days,' and the advent of a period of storm and stress, when the Academy system would be tested to the uttermost. Repeatedly in his annual reports to the Directors he drew attention to weak points, more especially to the unwieldy size of the classes, frequently running up to 80 or 90, to automatic promotion, and to the tendency of boys to leave school too early. Had his warnings been heeded in time much trouble and anxiety might have subsequently been spared.

It was, then, at no ordinary juncture that Dr. THOMAS HARVEY came to the Academy in 1869 as Dr. Hodson's successor, and the opening of the Fettes College in the following year was the outward and visible sign of the gravity of the crisis. Dr. Harvey had been a Snell Exhibitioner, and had formed at Balliol a lifelong friendship with Mr. Jowett, destined to become the Master of that College, with Sir Alexander Grant, with William Young Sellar, and with other men of high distinction. He had held a classical mastership at the Academy for a few years (1847-56)—it is recorded that he played cricket with the boys, a rare thing for a master to do in those days—so that he was already familiar with the ways of the school; while he might be presumed to have learned the business of a headmaster by his subsequent experience at Merchiston, where it is interesting to recall that Mr. Almond was one of his assistants. An accurate and elegant, if scarcely a profound, scholar, he was admirably qualified for taking the Rector's classes, and those who have been taught by him can testify to the pleasure as well as the profit which they reaped from his tuition, no less than to repeated instances of his consideration and kindness. But it was his misfortune rather than his fault that, whereas at the beginning of his career it was the chief function of a headmaster to teach, by the end of his career it had become the chief function of a headmaster to 'organise.' The centre of activity had passed from the class-room to the office, and to-day the difficulty for a zealous head is to find a spare moment to bestow upon the instruction of his pupils. Dr. Harvey failed to grasp the significance of a transition which can have been but little to his taste, and the general discipline and efficiency of the school suffered in consequence. Yet before his resignation he had introduced two innovations of importance. He had persuaded the Directors in the first place to institute a Preparatory Department for boys under ten or so, which has proved an unqualified success, and in the second place to provide a proper dinner for the boys in the middle of the day. Hitherto a simple and inexpensive meal, consisting perhaps of a 'bap' and a 'cookie,' or a 'half albert' and a rye roll, purchased at the window of the janitor's lodge from the fair hands of the 'Mrs. Jenny' of the day, had to content the most voracious appetite. Gaps had, of course, to be filled out of school, and tuck-shops did a roaring trade, the one which enjoyed the great bulk of the Academy custom being John Bowton's, at the west end of Hamilton Place. Henceforth a regular hot dinner was served daily in Hall for the modest price of one shilling. That these banquets supplied a 'felt want' is evident from their steadily increasing popularity, which ultimately necessitated the building of a new dining-hall and kitchen in 1912 on the north side of the geits' yards. It should be added that in 1886 a tentative beginning was made of promotion by merit, though it was not until Mr. Mackenzie's reign that the system got into full swing, and Dr. Harvey himself appears to have viewed it with little favour.

One really formidable danger was happily averted in Dr. Harvey's time. On the south side of the town a competitor had sprung up in the shape of George Watson's College, converted from an 'Hospital' into a day school of the familiar type. A section of the public was supposed to be desirous that the same process of transformation should be applied in the case of the Fettes College on the north side of the city. The Fettes authorities were strongly opposed to any such proposal, and, while not contending that day boys should be expressly excluded from the benefits of Sir William Fettes' bounty, were prepared to receive them only under conditions which operated as a practical barrier to their attendance. Had the Commissioners under the Educational Endowments (Scotland) Act of 1882, with whom jurisdiction in the matter rested, decided in favour of revolutionising the plan upon which that munificent endowment had so far been administered, the probabilities are that the Academy would have been 'squeezed out.' But they did not so decide, and a 'place in the sun' was left for the senior institution. The case for the Proprietors, it may be mentioned, was admirably presented before the Commissioners by the late Mr. Andrew Beatson Bell.[1]

Robert Jamieson Mackenzie came to the Academy as Rector in 1888 in the prime of life and vigour. He resigned in 1901 owing to a breakdown in health; and in sober truth he had expended in the interval more than enough energy, and undergone more than enough toil, to suffice for an ordinary working lifetime. As no detail was too minute to engage his attention, so no scheme was too ambitious or too Utopian to captivate his imagination. He accomplished great things because he aimed at even greater things, and, in so far as he was compelled to leave his ideals unrealised, they have to a great extent been attained under his successors. In breaking the back of his life's work, so to speak, he was truly fortunate in having associated with him at that time, as Secretary to the Directors, Mr. James Avon Clyde. The combination of two such agents—the one to generate, the other to regulate, the necessary power—was more than almost any Board could have withstood, and the Directors, to do them justice, though disposed by nature to a cautious and conservative policy, were in no mood to be obstructive. With surprisingly little difficulty Mr. Mackenzie induced them to embark upon projects and to incur financial responsibilities the mere contemplation of which but a few years before would have seemed an act of insanity. It was, moreover, one of the most remarkable features in the new Rector that, unlike many ardent and impetuous spirits, he would always listen attentively to the other side and carefully weigh every objection that could be formulated against his proposals. He was thus able to work in perfect harmony with men whose temperament and habit of mind were the very antithesis of his own, while a hidden and unexpected fund of patience enabled him to await with tolerable composure the maturing of his designs. He could indeed afford to wait, for his prognostications as to what the Board would inevitably be constrained to authorise and to do were almost always verified.

It is impossible in this place to give a full account of what Mr. Mackenzie achieved, but the following points may be briefly adverted to:—

1. He restricted the size of the classes to a maximum of twenty-five or thirty. This, of course, involved a considerable increase in the staff.

2. He confirmed the system of promotion by merit which Dr. Harvey had reluctantly introduced. He also made promotion terminal; but annual has now replaced terminal promotion, experience having demonstrated that the latter has often an unsettling effect.

3. He made cricket and football compulsory throughout the school, a step which rendered necessary the acquisition of an additional field at Inverleith Place, and which has had a highly beneficial effect upon the school athletics. 'If I were asked,' he wrote, 'what was the most dangerous occupation for a boy's hours of leisure, I should at once name loafing.'[1]

4. He succeeded in raising the average age for leaving school, and invested the most suitable of the older boys with a certain amount of disciplinary power by creating the 'Ephors.'

5. He did much to widen and diversify the life of the school, as by encouraging the study and practice of music, of which he was himself an enthusiastic amateur, and by re-establishing the school library, which, originally a feature of importance, had been allowed to dwindle away almost to vanishing point. He himself composed the music for an exceptionally felicitous and inspiring set of words by Mr. Henry Johnstone, which has firmly established itself as the school song, and which will be found later on in this volume.

6. He was instrumental in erecting in 1899 two large boarding-houses (a third has since been added), in each of which a master was installed to have the charge of about five-and-twenty boys, and he introduced a regulation that no boy who does not live with his parents or a relative shall attend the Academy except from the house of a master who holds the Directors' licence to take boarders. This rule is only relaxed in very special cases by leave of the Directors, granted upon good cause shown, and has proved a most salutary innovation.

7. He tightened the reins of discipline, which had become unduly slack. The old rule against leaving school in school hours was to be strictly enforced. Boys were to return to school after the holidays on the prescribed day and at the prescribed hour, or the Rector would know the reason why. Similarly, they were to remain at school until the last moment of every term (for the session was now officially divided into three ' terms '). They were no longer to come dropping casually in a day or two after the appointed commencement of work, or to drift casually away a day or two before its appointed termination, merely to suit the convenience or the caprice of parents. Every one must understand that rules were made to be observed and not to be broken. To facilitate the proper exercise of control, an official school head-dress was to be worn by every boy. This was to be a glengarry with the badge of Homer's head. Later on, a blue cap with the laurel wreath encircling a monogram embroidered on it in white was introduced as an alternative. Thus an Academy boy would be known everywhere by head-mark.

In this long list of reforms those embraced under the two last headings were probably of the highest immediate importance, for they grappled with some of the peculiar difficulties attendant upon the management of a day school. To conduct a boarding school is, in one sense, a comparatively simple affair. The boys are yours, body and soul, during term. And the vigilant parent is far away. Unpleasantness may arise, and may even be the subject of correspondence, but a journey has to be faced before the parent can descend upon you like a whirlwind, there is time to cool down, and everything has blown over before the arrival of the holidays. The problem before the day-school master, on the other hand, is clearly much more complicated and less patient of solution. Dual control is always a delicate matter. He has to fit in his own authority with that of the domestic ruler, and the two must not clash. In so far as they overlap they must coincide, or there will be trouble. But the parent, after all, belongs to a species of which the time-honoured differentia is the possession of reason, nor would it be safe to affirm that his affection for his offspring is always unenlightened. It is bare justice to a much scolded class of the community to record that the vast majority cheerfully acquiesced in, if they did not positively welcome, the 'screwing up' of school discipline for which Mr. Mackenzie was responsible. A few, who ought to have known better, may have grumbled because they were not allowed to take Jamie or Bobbie away from school at odd times every now and then to run messages or to meet trains. But these were rare exceptions. Uniform experience has shown that the school flourishes in proportion to the degree of firmness with which the code of rules and regulations is enforced.

Mr. Mackenzie's labours speedily bore good fruit. He gathered round him a body of eager and competent masters, mostly from beyond the Tweed, and well versed in the best traditions of the English public schools. Their loyal co-operation was invaluable, and so was that of the existing staff. Nothing could have been more honourable to all concerned than the good understanding and good feeling (often ripening into a much warmer emotion) which were immediately established between the old type of master and the new. Mr. Mackenzie seemed to breathe into all a portion of his own sanguine and invincible spirit—to impart to the whole school the secret of a new life, which still beats with undiminished vigour. The number of boys in attendance went up by leaps and bounds. Additional buildings had to be run up for their accommodation. But for one temporary check, due to a substantial rise in the fees which became necessary in 1896, the numbers have never gone back. In recent years they have equalled, if not surpassed, the tale of the most prosperous sessions under Archdeacon Williams.

One further observation must be made with regard to Mr. Mackenzie. Though not an old Academy boy, he had steeped himself in the history of the Academy both written and oral, and he set himself systematically to revive the school patriotism of old boys which, for one reason or another, had in many instances grown languid. In 1896 he instituted the excellent practice of holding a 'reunion' of old boys at intervals of a few years, the reunion culminating in a dinner in the Hall of the Academy. But such gatherings were merely indications of a more important movement. In 1900, after protracted negotiations between the representatives of the various interests concerned, the Academical Club was reconstituted upon a new and wider basis, so that it now comprehends the Cricket, and with it the Football, Club, and has a general membership of nearly 1200. Had it not been for the Academical Club this volume would never have been issued, and had it not been for the spade-work indispensable to its reconstruction, the Endowment Fund—always a favourite scheme of Mr. Mackenzie's—might never have taken practical shape. Opened in 1904, that fund amounted in a few years to upwards of £8000, and it has enabled the Directors to face without flinching such important undertakings as the erection of a science theatre and of the new dining-hall already referred to. Academicals will please note that the fund is still open, and some may perhaps be moved to emulate the generosity of such pious donors as Mr. George Crabbie, to whom the school owes a fives court and a handsome library; Mr. William Ewing Gilmour, to whom the school owes a fine pavilion at the New Field; and Mr. Patrick Johnston Ford, to whom the school owes the redecoration (to its immense advantage) of the old Hall, and the erection therein of an organ which specifically, and most appropriately, commemorates Mr. Mackenzie.

The recent history of the Academy must be dismissed in a few sentences. Mr. REGINALD CARTER succeeded Mr. Mackenzie in 1901, and left in 1910 upon his appointment to the Headmastership of Bedford Grammar School. He was a strong man in every sense of the expression, and neither parents nor boys were long in learning that behind that benevolent and imperturbable smile there lurked a will of iron. He followed out the broad lines of policy which his predecessor had laid down with only a few variations in detail, and the same course has been pursued by Mr. REGINALD HERBERT FERARD, who reigns in his stead. Many years, it may be hoped, will elapse ere it becomes proper to sum up the results of Mr. Ferard's Rectorship. Thus much, however, it is permissible to point out, that under both Mr. Carter and Mr. Ferard it became quite a usual occurrence for boys to win scholarships at the English Universities direct from the Academy—a feat seldom, if ever, performed even in the palmy days of Dr. Hodson. Let it also be put on record that five or six years ago there was formed an Officers' Training Corps, without which no school is nowadays complete, and that, upon the first occasion of entering for the competition, the Academy eight won the Ashburton Shield at Bisley in 1911. This notable triumph coincided with successes almost equally notable in football and cricket; for in these the Academy of to-day appears to retain much of the prowess which distinguished it of yore.

In this outline of the story of our Alma Mater much has of necessity been omitted. It has been impossible, for example, to speak of the strange case of the dux of 1841, erroneously believed to have perished a few years later beneath the blue waters of the Danube; of the visit of the young Prince of Wales (afterwards King Edward VII.) to the Exhibition in 1859; of the hot water into which Dr. Hodson plunged on that occasion by referring to the change for the better which had taken place under his sway in the external appearance, manners, and behaviour of the boys, and by alluding to the 'reign of terror' which had formerly existed in one of the classes of the Academy (believed to be that of Mr. Ferguson, by this time Professor of Humanity in the King's College, Aberdeen); of the 'round-crowned hat' episode, in which Dr. Hodson was involved in the 'sixties; of the memorable performance of the Antigone in 1881, of which the entire credit was due to Mr. Islay Ferrier Burns, then a master at the Academy and now a tutor at Westminster College in Cambridge; and of other dramatic performances which took place in Mr. Mackenzie's and Mr. Carter's times. These and sundry other topics not wholly destitute of interest must await the good pleasure of the vates sacer, whose constitutional habit of procrastination still delays the appearance of a full-dress history of the Academy, but who hopes before long to mend his ways.

It would have been even more inviting to linger on the many trains of thought and association which such a survey as has been attempted is apt to suggest. More especially would it have been delightful to expatiate upon the older generation of masters. Robert Hamilton, Writing and Arithmetic Master (1826-52); James Gloag, Mathematical Master (1824-64); Archibald Carmichael (1824-47), James Cumming (1826-46), John Trotter (1845-61), D'Arcy Wentworth Thompson (1852-64), Henry Weir (1853-81), James Carmichael, son of the foresaid Archibald, and himself an old Academy boy (1857-94), James Clyde (1861-78)—all Classical Masters; Alexander Gilmour, Writing and Arithmetic Master (1851-4 and 1868-1904); and John Sturgeon Mackay, Mathematical Master (1866-1904)—such names are full of significance, not merely for old Academy boys, but also, for all who take an interest in the history of education in Scotland. These men were by no means cast in the same mould; a striking and distinctive individuality was indeed their most marked feature; each in his way may be said to have been something of a 'character,' if we eliminate the depreciatory, while retaining the affectionate, connotation of the word in such a connexion. But, one and all, they were unmistakably formed of the clay which alone produces good men and true. Strong, manly, upright, independent, devoted to duty, well found, for the most part, in learning, 'consumers of their own smoke,' they form a group of which any institution in Christendom might be proud, and which any educational system may be deemed exceptionally fortunate in having produced. And they kindled in countless pupils a warmth of regard and affection which the lapse of years has proved powerless to extinguish.

Something, too, might have been written in praise of the famous men who have gone before us—of the scholars, the divines, the statesmen, the lawyers, the doctors, the public servants, the merchants, the sailors, and the soldiers, to whom the Academy was as a nursing mother. But, after all, their names and the outline of their careers will be found in this Register, and many of these names will readily occur to every reader. There are some men for whom the most fascinating occupation of their leisure moments consists in the desultory perusal of 'Whitaker' or 'Oliver and Boyd.' Let us trust that all old Academy boys, together with some others who can lay no claim to that distinction, will find an even more potent spell in the succeeding pages, while they skip from entry to entry, as one familiar name calls up another, and obediently follow whithersoever their fancy may lead. The fare set before the reader is varied, abundant, and appetising. Let him, therefore, fall to with a will, but let him not forget to murmur by way of a preliminary grace the pious aspiration:

'FLOREAT ACADEMIA.'

J. H. M.

Edinburgh, May 1914.

‘It is one of the most benign influences of learning and literature that they can unite those whom nothing else can. And so it is pleasing to find that in the foundation of this our school the great Sir Walter joined heart and hand with Cockburn and Jeffrey and others, to whom in most other public questions he had stood in life-long antagonism. It was a pure and generous impulse which made these great men, in the prime of their powers, pause to think of the coming generation, and to provide for them what they hoped might prove some better learning than they themselves had enjoyed. . . . But to produce great scholars is not the only or even the chief work of a large school—rather to train boys so that they shall become upright, honourable, intelligent, industrious men in all the walks of life. Tried by this test, I believe the Academy has abundantly fulfilled its mission.’

FLOREAT ACADEMIA

Floreat Academia,
Mater alma, Mater pia;
Huic paremus, hanc amamus,
Ergo fortiter canamus
Chorus—Floreat, etc.

Domi suboles est nota,
Atque loca per remota;
Hic et illic gloriantur,
Quia nostri nominantur.
Chorus—Floreat, etc.

Utriusque togae decus,
Sunt qui Dei pascant pecus,
Juri sunt qui roborando
Opus dent et illustrando.
Chorus—Floreat, etc.

Hi complexi sunt honorem,
Pacis imponentes morem;
Indulgentes hi virtuti,
Signa Martis sunt secuti.
Chorus—Floreat, etc.

Hi sciendis rebus nati
Sunt Naturam percontati;
Illi freti medicina
Aegros eximunt ruina.
Chorus—Floreat, etc.

Artis exsecuti normas,
Hi venustas fingunt formas;
Illi vias humanarum
Munivere litterarum.
Chorus—Floreat, etc.

Floruit, florebit usque,
Artibus virtutibusque,
Arbor ferax, et natura
Rite fruges repensura.
Chorus—Floreat, etc.

Venit vox a Solis ortu,
Redit a cadentis portu,
'Nos te, Mater, salutamus!'
Ergo fortiter canamus.
Chorus—Floreat, etc.

HENRY JOHNSTONE.

EDITORIAL NOTE

It will interest readers to be informed that the Frontispiece has been drawn by Mr. William Hole, R.S.A., R.P.E. Reference to this outstanding feature of the Register could not be made in the Preface, as although Mr. Hole most cordially entertained the desire of the Academical Club that he should furnish a Frontispiece, and generously undertook to do so if possible, it was doubtful until almost the last moment if the pressure of his other engagements would permit him to execute the work.

The sincere thanks of the Academical Club are due to Mr. Hole for his gift of this admirable etching.
